HISTORY

Edgefield Village was founded in 1785 and incorporated by the South Carolina legislature in 1830. It grew up as a commercial center for the surrounding farms and became the seat of Edgefield County, with the square and courthouse at its center ever since.

The town calls itself the Home of Ten Governors for the unusual number of South Carolina governors who came from the area, and it produced a long line of political figures, including George McDuffie of the Nullification fight. It is also known for its alkaline glazed stoneware pottery, including the work of the enslaved potter known as Dave. A statue of Senator Strom Thurmond was dedicated on the square in 1984, and the town's story holds both deep religious roots and the hard legacy of slavery, the Confederacy, and the Red Shirt years.

PRAY FOR

This is the seat of authority for the whole county, where the direction of the town has been set for more than two hundred years. Edgefield put more men in the governor's chair than almost anywhere in the state, so there is a real spirit of rule and influence sitting over this place, and not all of it has been used well. Pray for honest judges and leaders who fear God, and ask Him to break the grip of the old political pride that has ridden this town for generations.

“Righteousness exalts a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people.”

Proverbs 14:34 (ESV)

HISTORY

Macedonia is recorded by the Edgefield County Historical Society as the town's largest historically African American church, with an adjoining cemetery that holds generations of the local Black community.

Black Baptist life in the area grew quickly after the Civil War, as freedmen left the white led congregations they had been part of and formed churches of their own across the county. Macedonia stands within that wider story, and its cemetery preserves the memory of families who shaped the community through and beyond the era of emancipation.

PRAY FOR

This is the largest historically Black church in Edgefield, and the cemetery behind it holds generations of saints who carried the faith through slavery and everything that came after. The county has a deep racial wound in its story, and the division ran right through the church itself. Ask God for real unity between Black and white believers here, not a polite truce but the oneness Jesus bought with His own blood. Thank Him for the faithfulness of the people buried here, and ask Him to raise up their children's children to carry it further.

“For he himself is our peace, who has made us both one and has broken down in his flesh the dividing wall of hostility.”
Ephesians 2:14 (ESV)

Slade Lake

ADDRESS	GPS	MAP
90 Water Works Rd, Edgefield, SC 29824 (fishing pier)	33.78123, -81.91861	Open pin

HISTORY

Slade Lake is a lake of roughly 36 acres inside the town of Edgefield, set along Water Works Road. The road name points back to the lake's origins as part of the town's water supply.

Today it serves as a public fishing and recreation spot, with a fishing pier and a boat ramp. The lake marks the trailhead of the Ten Governors Trail, a paved rail trail of just under a mile that follows a former railroad bed and is lined with ten stone markers honoring the South Carolina governors who came from Edgefield.

PRAY FOR

Before this was a fishing spot it was the town's water works, the source that kept Edgefield alive. Water is never only water in Scripture. It means life, and it means the Spirit of God poured out on ground that cannot live without Him. The trail around the lake carries markers for the ten governors who came out of this town, so the source of the county's life and the legacy of its leadership sit in the same place. Pray for living water over a thirsty county, and ask God that every leader who rises out of Edgefield from now on would draw from Him and not from the old wells of pride.

“For I will pour water on the thirsty land, and streams on the dry ground; I will pour my Spirit upon your offspring.”
Isaiah 44:3 (ESV)

HISTORY

Edgefield's textile mill was built in the late 1890s by the Edgefield Manufacturing Company, a firm organized by Edgefield native and New South industrialist D. A. Tompkins, in the Cumberland neighborhood named for the railroad that ran toward Charleston.

The plant was later sold to the Kendall Company and became the most important industry in town through the first half of the twentieth century. When Kendall closed the mill in 1982, about 200 workers lost their jobs. In 1983 a new company, Edgefield Cotton Yarns, bought and retrofitted the building, and that venture grew into Delta Woodside Industries. The mill still stands and has been the subject of redevelopment plans, including a proposal to convert it into workforce housing.

PRAY FOR

For most of a century this mill was the thing that kept Edgefield working. When it closed in 1982 around two hundred families lost their income almost overnight, and the town has carried that loss ever since. Places hold the memory of what happened in them, and this one holds decline and disappointment. Pray over the economy of Edgefield and over every family still feeling the weight of those years. The building is set to be rebuilt, so ask God to make that a sign of something larger, the rebuilding of the whole town.

"They shall build up the ancient ruins; they shall raise up the former devastations."

Isaiah 61:4 (ESV)

HISTORY

Horn's Creek was organized in 1768 by the Reverend Daniel Marshall, a leading figure of the Separate Baptist movement that spread through the Carolina backcountry during the Great Awakening. Marshall had built a meeting house at nearby Stevens Creek in 1766 before extending his preaching to the Horn's Creek neighborhood where he lived.

The congregation became one of the largest in the Edgefield District, with a membership that at times passed 300 and included both white and Black members. It served as a mother church for many later congregations in the area, among them Edgefield's First Baptist Church and Mount Canaan Baptist Church, which the Reverend Alexander Bettis, a formerly enslaved man, founded in 1867. The surviving meeting house is one of the oldest structures in the county and was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1971.

Note. The gate is often locked and the building is old and fragile. Pray from the grounds.

PRAY FOR

This is the oldest of them all, founded in 1768 when a move of God swept through the backcountry. Daniel Marshall preached here, and this church became the mother of dozens of others across the district, white and Black, including churches planted by freedmen after the war. Revival did not come to Edgefield by accident. It started on this ground, so this is where you go to ask God to do it again. Stand here and ask Him to send another awakening over the county, and to let the next move begin where the first one did. Re-dig the old well.

“O LORD, I have heard the report of you, and your work, O LORD, do I fear. In the midst of the years revive it.”

Habakkuk 3:2 (ESV)

“If my people who are called by my name humble themselves, and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven and will forgive their sin and heal their land.”

2 Chronicles 7:14 (ESV)
